History

Michael Cook is from the Bidjara people of south-west Queensland. He has a wealth of photographic knowledge and experience that has gained him national and international recognition within the Indigenous contemporary art scene. Undiscovered subtly portrays the 'discovery' of Australia by the British in a contemporary style. Michael has been a finalist in 29th Telstra National Aboriginal Art Award, 2012 Sunshine Coast Art Prize, Josephine Ulrick & Win Shubert Award 2012, Western Australia Indigenous Art Awards 2011. Michael has works at the National Gallery of Australia, Artbank, Queensland Art Gallery and Bendigo Art Gallery as well as several others around Australia. He also has some pieces in The Owen and Wagner Collection of Australian Aboriginal Art in the USA. Michael is the winner of the Visual Artist of the Year 14th Annual Deadly Awards, Visual Artist of the Year 17th Annual Deadly Awards, People's Choice Award West Australian Indigenous Art Awards 2011. A contemporary photograph, which reflects upon the 'discovery' and occupation of Australia by the British. This photo questions the notion of 'Discovery' and who really discovered Australia, while making reference to what was always here, what was introduced through colonisation and the effect that had on the Indigenous people, their culture and country.
