History

Heinz 'Henry' Lippmann studied electrical engineering at the ORT Technical School in Berlin. He was 17 years old when the school, fearing the political environment of Germany, arranged for around 100 of the boys from the school to leave Berlin for England. The ORT arranged the paperwork and the boys travelled to Harwich on the English coast by the new Stoomvaart Maatschappij Zeeland (SMZ) vessel, QUEEN EMMA. On arrival in England Lippmann travelled to Leeds where he continued his electrical engineering studies at the Leeds ORT Technical Engineering School. Six months later he found himself, along with hundreds of other young men aboard the HMT DUNERA on his way to Australia.
