History

In September 1930, Rear-Admiral C C Kayser and his squadron of the Royal Netherlands Navy arrived in Fremantle, Western Australia. The Register News-Pictorial in Adelaide reported that Dutch sailors were presented with a dingo as a gift from the city of Fremantle. The squadron then sailed to Adelaide on 19 September with the band from JAVA performing for curious onlookers. On 3 October 1930, the ships sailed into Sydney Harbour and berthed at the Oceanic Steamship Company and Burns Philp and Company Wharf in West Circular Quay. The Sydney Morning Herald (SMH) provided an itinerary of events and reported that JAVA was to fire a 'salute of 21 guns' once the squadron passed Middle Head and 13 guns in salute of Rear-Admiral Adams of the Royal Australian Navy (RAN). Once the squadron moored at the quay, they were to be greeted by a guard of honour provided by the RAN. A civic reception was then held at Town Hall, followed by a Ministerial luncheon and a ceremony, where Rear-Admiral Kayser placed a wreath on the Cenotaph at Martin Place. The following day, the Rear-Admiral and his commanding officers were received by the Governor at Randwick racecourse. A luncheon was also held at the famous Millions Club on Rowe Street and the Commodore of the Royal Motor Yacht Club also entertained a party of officers on a harbour excursion. Officers and ratings were granted free transport on Sydney trams and ferries and free entry to theatres across Sydney and to Taronga Zoo. The visitors even played a football match in Easton Park, Rozelle with a Sydney team. They were defeated by the Australian side and later a reception was held in Smith's Hall by the Metropolitan Association and the Balmain Football Company. Whilst many of the officers and sailors attended dances and dinners in Sydney, Rear-Admiral Kayser and commanding officers, along with Dutch Consul-General Petrus Ephrem Teppema, paid 'an official call on the Federal Ministry' in Canberra. On 10 October, the squadron hosted a reception on board JAVA 'as a return for the hospitality they had received while in Sydney'. The SMH reported that distinguished guests were greeted by the Dutch Consul-General Teppema and his wife Madame Carmen Delprat Teppema and Rear-Admiral Kayser. Sydney's socialites, including Miss Nancy Bavin and Miss Hilda Marks, graced the social pages of the SMH. Detailed descriptions of baku hats, chiffon dresses and fox furs were relayed, before the squadron departed Sydney for New Zealand the following day.
